MINOR CHANGES FOR 2011

As tax season approaches, there are a few things to consider when reviewing your personal portfolio.

During 2011, there were no major changes in personal income tax rates.

There were minor increases within the brackets on which the tax rates are applied, as these were increased to reflect the national rate of inflation.

The Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) announced some additional credits for the 2011 tax year. The most significant addition was for families with children enrolled in courses deemed eligible for the new Children's Arts Tax Credit (CATC).

Eligible CATC expenses can be claimed for children who were under 16 at the beginning of 2011 – or under 18, if the child was eligible for the Disability Tax Credit. The CRA has provided a list with several characteristics of eligible CATC activities, including programs which:

- contribute to the development of creative skills or expertise in artistic or cultural activities;

Various children's programs will qualify for the new arts tax credit.

- provide a substantial focus on wilderness and the natural environment;

- help children develop and use particular intellectual skills;

- include structured interaction among children where supervisors teach or help children develop interpersonal skills; or

- provide tutoring in academic subjects.

To qualify, a program must be a minimum length of either eight consecutive weeks or five consecutive days. The activities must be supervised and suitable for children.

This credit is meant to complement the Children's Fitness Tax Credit, which was announced in 2006. Amounts which can be claimed for the Children's Fitness Tax Credit are not eligible for use with the CATC. In order to claim either of these credits, contact your children's program providers to obtain receipts.

The maximum amount of this credit is $500 per child, which can reduce your taxes owing by up to $75.

DID YOU KNOW...

The provincial rate of tax is based on one's place of residence as of December 31, 2011. For example, if a person lived in Nova Scotia for most of the year, but moved to British Columbia in December, they would be deemed a British Columbia resident for tax purposes.

This could be quite advantageous from a tax perspective, since a resident of Nova Scotia would pay $31,331 on $100,000 of employment income. A resident of British Columbia would pay $25,454 on the same $100,000 of income. This is a difference of $5,877 between the two provinces.

CERTAIN EXPENSES CAN REDUCE TAXES

Various deductions and credits can help to reduce the amount of taxes payable to the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) each year. Please take a few moments to review the following items, in order to ensure you do not miss out on any eligible expenses for you and your household. VOLUNTEER FIREFIGHTERS RECOGNIZED

Volunteer firefighters received a nod from the federal government recently with the creation of an additional volunteer firefighter tax credit.

You can claim a credit amount of $3,000 – resulting in up to $450 of tax savings – if you met the following conditions in 2011:

- you were a volunteer firefighter during the year; and
- you completed at least 200 hours of eligible volunteer firefighting services with one or more fire departments in the year.

However, if you provided services to the same fire department, other than as a volunteer, for the same or similar duties, you cannot include any hours related to that department in determining if you have met the 200-hour threshold.

Eligible services include:

- responding to and being on call for firefighting and related emergency calls as a firefighter;
- attending meetings held by the fire department;
- participating in required training related to the prevention or suppression of fire.
